This whole issue is getting out of hand. It has become apparent that this is not about justice, simply Microsoft's competitors trying to destroy them. If this were about justice then this case would have been settled.

If Sun Microsystems, Oracle and Netscape would simply build better products, improve their internal business structure and stop spending so much energy on whining about Microsoft they too could be successful.

As an American, I am sick of this whole thing. It has wasted time, money and energy. The U.S. Government has allowed this whole case to escalate by allowing the competitors to go beyond the request of an investigation. It has allowed this to be handled as a revenge case rather than a case about fairness or protecting consumers.
